

Andrew Alston has worked in IT for more than twenty years, in UNIX system administration, security consulting and auditing, and academic networking. For the past five years he has worked as CTO of South Africa's national research and education network, TENET, where he has led the development of high-speed connectivity and advanced networking services. Andrew likes fast cars, fine cigars, and a good argument.